For many employers and/or managers, managing performance is very stressful. Without effective performance management you don't get a return on the investment you've made in "human capital". Today's workplace requires a new, more relevant, meaningful and productive approach to performance management. Productive ongoing feedback and a new method of goal setting is the contemporary method of choice for effective performance management. This webinar will help build a more effective team by opening and enhancing lines of communication, resolving conflict more effectively, creating more productive and cooperative teams and self-motivating people to achieve their potential.

- Better use performance reviews
- Implement a goal/feedback model for performance management
- Best practices for documenting performance concerns and performance expectations
- The most common corrective action mistake
- Provide effective, productive and constructive feedback
